Dining IN

Why ask the hotel concierge for dining advice? Major destination restaurants — the kind that bring in people from miles around — are increasingly found in-house. BY ELAINE GLUSAC

A Located on the 16th floor of the new Trump International Hotel & Tower in Chicago, SIXTEEN surveys the city skyline from a matchless riverside locale. Chef Frank Brunacci's delectable dishes demand attention in a fittingly opulent room. (312) 588-8000, www.trumpchicago.com

B Named for the fossil resin amber, AMBAR, the lagoon-side restaurant at the new Mandarin Oriental Riviera Maya, showcases the sophisticated Latin-Asian cooking of chef Ignacio Granda del Gallego in an exhibition kitchen. 011-52-984-877-3295, www.mandarinoriental.com

C Acqualina Resort and Spa in Sunny Isles Beach, north of Miami, boasts an outpost of the acclaimed New York eatery IL MULINO. Outstanding complimentary antipasto plates foreshadow an evening of Italian treats such as veal chops and lobster risotto, all in a cool setting brimming with energy. D At the new restaurant in the just-renovated Stoneleigh Hotel & Spa in Dallas, BOLLA, chef David Bull serves market-driven regional Italian fare — think veal cheeks with preserved lemons — in the Art Deco landmark. (214) 871-7111, www.stoneleighhotel.com

E At the Hotel Principe di Savoia in Milan, locals queue up for the new Sunday brunch at ACANTO. In the hotel's Winter Garden Bar, culinary cocktails come paired with canapés. And with AA's new direct JFK-Milan service, getting there is easy. 011-39-02-62301, www.hotelprincipedisavoia.com

F Once a notorious jail, the Liberty Hotel in Boston has all its food-and-beverage bases covered — the VEUVE CLICQUOT CHAMPAGNE BAR, CLINK for small plates, and SCAMPO, the newest Italian outpost from popular chef Lydia Shire. (617) 224-4000, www.libertyhotel.com
